A photograph of a sunset over a field of tall grass. The sun is low on the horizon, creating a warm, golden glow. The sky is blue with some clouds. In the foreground, there are several stalks of tall grass, some in focus and some blurred. A large, orange, cloud-like thought bubble is superimposed over the center of the image, containing the text "Did you watch the sunset?".

A close-up photograph of a tulip flower in a field. The tulip in the foreground is in focus, showing its orange and yellow petals. The background is filled with other tulips, some in bloom and some as buds, all slightly out of focus. A large, light green thought bubble with a scalloped edge is positioned in the upper right quadrant of the image. Inside the bubble, the text "Did you go on a picnic?" is written in a black, serif font. Three smaller, light green circles of decreasing size trail from the bottom left of the bubble towards the tulip flower.

Did you go on a picnic?

A high-angle photograph of a person swimming in a pool. The water is a vibrant blue, and the swimmer is wearing a white cap and dark swim trunks. A large, dark blue thought bubble is superimposed over the upper part of the image, containing the text 'Did you go swimming in the pool?'. Three smaller circles lead from the bottom of the thought bubble to the swimmer's head.

A photograph taken from the passenger side of a car. A person wearing a light-colored, textured sweater is pointing their right index finger at a road map held open in the car. The map shows a network of roads and geographical features. To the left, the car's dashboard is visible, featuring a digital display showing '14°C' and 'rateFM' with a date of '6/3/2018'. The car's interior and the view through the windshield are also visible.

Marilyn could not take in the de interference that these people felt she had to have in every else's life. They thought nothing of using the mother and private sorrows of their friends with Marilyn, who was after all a complete stranger, here possibly because of an accidental home exchange. While she felt sympathy for Rai and all that had happened to her, she also felt a sense of annoyance.
Why had she not kept her dignity, and refused to allow all these people into her life? The only way to cope with tragedy and grief was to refuse to permit it to be articulated and acknowledged. Deep in essence and you had some hope of survival. Marilyn got out of bed and looked down on the meagre garden and the other large brick houses of the neighbourhood. She felt very lost and alone in this place where garrulous people wanted to know everything about you and expected you to need the details of their lives too.
She ached for the cool house and beautiful garden of Westcote II she wore there now she could go and swim lengths of her pool side in the knowledge that no one would call and burden her with post mortems about last night. Clement the cat who slept on her bed every night woke up and stretched and came over to her hopefully.
He was purring loudly. The day was about to begin, he was expecting a game and a bowl of something.
Marilyn looked at him sadly. 'I don't usually talk to animals, Clement, but I'm making an exception in your case. I made the wrong decision coming here. It was the worst decision I ever made in my life.'

Do you think when we're talking to Gransy we should call her Nora?' Brian asked.
'What?' Annie looked up from her book.
'You know ... if we call Bernadette's mother by her first name maybe we should do the same with Gransy.' Brian wanted to be fair.
'No, Brian, and shut up,' said Annie.
'You always say shut up, you never say anything nice, not ever at all.'
'Who could say anything nice to you, Brian, honestly?'
'Well, some people do.'
'Who apart from Mum and Dad? And they hate to because you're what they got.'
'Tricia often says nice things.'
'Tell me one nice thing she said to you today, go on tell me.'
'She said it was good that I had remembered to let my knights command the centre of the board.'
'And had you?' Annie still refused chess lessons and the credit's wasn't that Brian had mastered it.
'Well, only by accident in a way. I just sort of put them out there and they were commanding and she was very pleased with me.'
Brian smiled at the triumph of it all.
Sometimes he was more pathetic than awful, Annie thought, you'd feel sorry for him. And he didn't really understand that their lives were going to change. He thought that after the summer
